

The American News Media is out of control. They habitually lie to the American public, peddling their agenda-driven views as "fact," when in many cases there is no truth in their claims. They mar the concept of a free press, as their manipulation of the American public prohibits people from making their own informative decisions. Sinclair Broadcasting and Fox Broadcasting are the worst of the offenders, yet they regularly stand behind the mantle of free press. Does freedom of the press mean the freedom to spread lies, incite fear, and otherwise sway public opinion so as to further any agendas they might have? I certainly would hope not. It is therefore essential that standards be set for American journalism. They should be entitled to report only the facts, and a clear delineation should be made between what is news and what is commentary. All sources should be documented (no more of this "Some people say..." jargon). As an American, I am tired of being lied to and manipulated, and I am even more tired of mainstream media being able to get away with it. The FCC needs to act.